Hiring Team

Avetta

Avetta's mission to make supply chains safer and more sustainable resonates with me, especially the focus on turning analytics into actionable insights for enterprise clients. My experience leading analytics and API product roadmaps at Emerson Electric involved balancing customer needs with scalable platform development, which aligns well with Avetta's goal of delivering client-facing analytics that truly reflect supplier readiness and risk.

I've built executive dashboards and KPI reporting systems that improved visibility into platform performance and user engagement, similar to the dashboards Avetta uses to make compliance and risk visible. At Chamberlain Group, I developed analytics tools that supported data-driven decisions and improved onboarding efficiency, which speaks to the kind of customer value Avetta prioritizes.

My hands-on work with AI-powered analytics agents at LITET, automating reporting and decision support using OpenAI APIs, gives me practical insight into leveraging AI to accelerate product management and enhance analytics capabilities. I'm comfortable using AI tools not just to ship features but to improve my own workflow, which fits Avetta's culture of experimentation and innovation.

I also bring experience collaborating closely with engineering and data teams to shape product strategy and deliver scalable solutions, including working with data infrastructure and visualization tools. This technical background will help me engage effectively with Avetta's analytics infrastructure teams and contribute to building conversational analytics and NLQ-driven insights.

Joining Avetta means owning a product surface that directly impacts how enterprises manage supply chain risk, which is a meaningful challenge. I'm eager to bring my blend of technical product management, analytics expertise, and AI experience to help advance Avetta's vision and deliver measurable value to its clients.

Sincerely,
Ricardo Lugo
