Hiring Team

Stitch Fix

Stitch Fix's blend of expert styling and AI-driven personalization aligns closely with my experience leading data-driven growth and automation in e-commerce. At LITET, I built AI-powered analytics agents that automated complex reporting and optimization workflows, reducing manual effort by 80% and enabling daily KPI monitoring. This hands-on work with AI to streamline decision-making and improve customer engagement resonates with Stitch Fix's mission to deliver highly personalized, seamless style experiences.

I'm drawn to the opportunity to shape the core Fix Experience because I've managed complex product portfolios and driven prioritization based on deep customer insights and business impact. My background in scaling subscription-based products and leveraging recommendation systems to boost retention fits well with your focus on innovation balanced against foundational technical excellence. I've also led cross-functional teams across engineering, marketing, and analytics, fostering collaboration to deliver measurable growth—skills I see as essential for driving Stitch Fix's largest business unit forward.

Moreover, my experience defining strategic roadmaps and release plans, combined with a strong analytical approach to A/B testing and data-driven decision-making, will help ensure that product investments maximize client value and business results. I appreciate Stitch Fix's commitment to inclusive culture and continuous improvement, and I look forward to contributing by mentoring peers and elevating product practices.

Joining Stitch Fix feels like a natural next step where I can apply my technical product management and AI automation expertise to enhance personalized shopping at scale, helping clients discover styles they love while driving meaningful business impact.

Sincerely,
Ricardo Lugo
